the Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA) and the New England Journal of Medicine (NEJM).

As a result of the 1990s, the medical literature has become more complex and more difficult to read. The average length of a research article in the JAMA has increased from 1,000 words in 1980 to 1,500 words in 1995. The average length of a research article in the NEJM has increased from 1,200 words in 1980 to 1,800 words in 1995. The average length of a research article in the British Medical Journal (BMJ) has increased from 1,000 words in 1980 to 1,500 words in 1995.

The increase in the length of research articles has been attributed to a number of factors. One factor is the increasing complexity of medical research. Another factor is the increasing number of authors who are contributing to research articles. A third factor is the increasing number of references that are cited in research articles.

The increase in the length of research articles has also been attributed to the increasing number of journals that are publishing research articles. The number of journals that are publishing research articles has increased from 1,000 in 1980 to 2,000 in 1995.
